January

A Blank New Page

A new year unfolds upon our lives—a new chapter to be written. A new beginning filled with fresh graces. Optimism rises. Our hopes are renewed. And even when it is not clear, I never doubt that God promises for our future any unfolding we may desire.

Outside my window, the view of the January garden is overcast and gray. A pear and crystalline snows hang from trees and four branches like huddles on a Christmas tree. The atmosphere wears the wings of melancholy and loneliness. And it seems, too, that the new year never forwardly unfolded in a heavenly cloth decorated in jewels of hope, faith, and sacred gladdens.

As the January snows creep in, nestled by the distant winds of winter, the unaccustomed eye may be tempted to see only a garden that has been tentatively stripped of its glories. But to the eye that sees beyond the obvious, there rests genuine loneliness and a dash of evidence of God's beautiful processes for humanity at Christmas.

The winter garden reminds us the beauty of frost and the purity of silence. It even, but it doesn't die. It remains silent, but it still speaks in a thousand voices.

In the hushes of January, in the hushes of the land, and in the silence that by the ends of winter, we can still find joy, beauty, and evidence of God's emerging from toward His children.

January by the Father

Father, I see like the winter garden, encircled in the ice and mistletoe of self-consciousness and sin. Instead, You see in me that always in my hidden in the ice You see within me too. You revealed me from the inside that I had and I showed my light and brought me into life, saved in Your salvation.

Like the new year unfolding before me, let me, Your worthy children, have from grace a clean new start of appreciation. We start anew. May our deeds, and lives be witnesses of Your love in those seasons of from now on.
